

CONCILIATION

Mr. Raghav and Mr. Madhavan have been neighbors for over 15 years in a quiet residential community. Recently, a serious dispute has arisen between them over the shared driveway that separates their properties. Both Mr. Raghav and Mr. Madhavan claim ownership of a section of the driveway, which has led to heated arguments and disagreements. Each neighbor has obtained separate surveys and legal documents to support their claims, but neither is willing to back down.

The conflict has escalated beyond the issue of the driveway, with both parties accusing each other of blocking access, causing noise disturbances, and engaging in acts of harassment. There have also been allegations of intentional property damage, further deepening the rift between them. The situation has reached a point where Mr. Raghav and Mr. Madhavan are no longer on speaking terms, and both have filed lawsuits against each other, seeking legal resolution to the dispute.

The ongoing conflict has strained not only their relationship but has also disrupted the harmony of the neighborhood, with other residents feeling compelled to take sides. To avoid a prolonged and costly legal battle, the case has been referred to conciliation in the hope of finding a mutually agreeable solution that can restore peace and resolve the underlying issues between Mr. Raghav and Mr. Madhavan.